Changes Through Learning Circle

I am Chobita Kujur, a member of the Learning Circle group of the village Vangni, Mithpukur, Rangpur located in the northern part of Bangladesh. I got married and came to my in-laws’ house to stay with them. Here, I found no domestic animals or fowl. They lived by cultivating a very small piece of land. They were not focused on planning for the future or achieving a decent living standard. It created conflicts at times from the very beginning. My husband was the only source of income for the family, and it was challenging for him to keep going. I took the initiative to discuss with my husband about better planning for improving the family’s standard of living. I shared that, as I am not skilled in working on others’ land, I could start raising goats (black Bengal) to contribute to the family’s progress. But I was in a dilemma as I did not get any suggestions or advice on how to raise goats properly. After few days, SIL Bangladesh started their activity in our village called Learning Circle (a group of 12 to 15 members who sit together once a week to learn, share, and discuss). I learned the basic ideas from the book (Amrao Pari· We Can Too) about raising domestic animals and planned to start but I didn't have the capital I needed. I took a loan of BDT 12,000 from a local NGO and bought four baby goats (two castrated goats and two female goats) to raise. (Page: 2)

Special Comments

“hope soon we will be the owner of a small farm. Because I am a newly wedded bride, everyone praises me for my initiative, and people are getting encouraged to raise goats or other animals themselves.

SIL Bangladesh helps communities achieve their development goals while retaining their Ethnolinguistic identities.
I am taking regular care of these and giving worm medicine as part of regular medication as I was advised by the local veterinarian. I planted grass for my goats next to our crop field. I keep the goats in a clean space. Within five months, I sold my two castrated goats for BDT 10,000. I paid BDT 6,000 of my loan and, with BDT 3,000, I bought two more female goats and gave BDT 1,000 to my husband. Now I have two goats with young. Soon they will give birth. We are planning to raise more goats and hope soon we will be the owner of a small farm. Because I am a newly wedded bride, everyone praises me for my initiative, and people are getting encouraged to raise goats or other animals themselves. I share regularly with them, and we discuss all the things that are necessary in our group. I want to give thanks to the SIL Learning Circle initiatives which have changed my life, our thoughts, and our living standards.
